

This I Believe - The power of “doing”

The power of “doing” is very important if you want to achieve big things. If you want to achieve something you need the will to stand up and start doing it. Therefore, you need to be inspired and focused. You can only achieve things if you are convinced. Here I will talk about the power of doing vs not doing, why you should do something and the problems if you do nothing. I believe in the power of doing.

Doing vs not doing. Great things can only be achieved if you do more than you have to a wise man once said. If you think about this sentence it actually makes sense. You can only achieve something if you work hard for it and learn new skills and get better daily. You can only change the world by doing something and not by sitting on the couch watching TV. If no one ever did anything, we would not have the new technologies, cars, planes, phones, or houses. We would probably still live like the people in the stone age, being more animal than human. If we all did nothing, we could not even dream of this living standard. If you do nothing you will always stay the same and never get new experience. I think if you do something which inspires you sooner or later it will work, and you will be successful.

Why you should do/ try everything what comes to your mind. As a two-year-old you started doing something, you started to walk. From this point onwards you could explore the whole world by yourself because you learned a new skill. But you were still very slow and it was very hard, one year later you could run. Now you could explore the world even faster. Carl Benz wanted to explore the world even faster and developed a car. At the beginning the car was slower than a horse and was stinking. Today we have electric cars, which go 50 times faster than a horse and do not stink. This all happened because someone believed in something and tried to make his idea come true.

Problems if you do not do something. If no one ever did anything, we would not have the same living standard or humans would not exist anymore. I am very pleased, that there are many people that do more than they must. In my opinion everybody who has a job and does it regularly, does more than he must do. Our society also works like this, if you do a lot or something smart, you will get more money than somebody who sits at home and does nothing. Some people are sick and therefore can't do anything, but there are also some people who are very healthy and do not work, in my opinion this is not fair. Some of them still get money for doing nothing from the state. So indirectly they get money from the hard-working people.

I think everyone should do something (who is able to). I think it is normal that people do not want to work and want to do something relaxing. But if you want to change the world or solve a problem you need to do a lot.
